Railing as easy as 1-2-3 (4-5)

You know wherever there's decking, there's railing. But traditionally, that's meant either a stick-built wooden version, a traditional composite railing combo or a white PVC model. In other words, not much variety.

Instead, Trex has a better way to build railing: with modular components. A simple step-by-step process helps you choose the basic elements of railing in not-so-basic materials, finishes and colors. What follows are details on our three distinct lines—Trex Transcend®, Trex Reveal™ and Trex Select®—including every rail, baluster and post sleeve to help you build the most durable, most luxurious railing around.

Railing—a lot easier than it looks

Each section of Trex® railing is comprised of the pieces shown below. On the following pages, we designate these components with a numbered process (3-step or 5-step) for easy tracking as you plan.

BEST

High design, myriad options

For those projects that demand the very best, Transcend® railing offers the widest assortment of customizable components with the most color options—seven in all.

Here's how:

Transcend is a 5-step process. Choose Trex® post sleeves, caps and skirts (steps 1 & 2). Then choose rails and balusters for a custom design (steps 3-5).

Transcend also offers a simple, 3-step option if you choose a rail & baluster kit in Classic White.

The bright idea

The dimmable glow of four Trex® Deck Lighting™ options—two of which are railing options—creates the right mood lighting right under the moonlight.

- » Low voltage LEDs are cool to the touch
- » LEDs are rated up to 40,000 hours and use up to 75% less energy than traditional incandescent lighting
- » Build into a new deck or retrofit into an existing one

Here's how:

Choose a post cap light instead of our traditional post sleeve cap for Step 2a. Add deck rail lights to illuminate Trex post sleeves.

Recessed deck lights and stair riser lights can be used on decking and stairs as an additional accent.
